Summary:

Parenting Education provides structured parenting skill development. Education regarding parenting, discipline and child development is a means to provide parents whose children are “at risk” or have been abused or neglected with tools to assist them in the lifelong task of disciplining, understanding and loving their children. Family-centered parent training programs include family skills training and family activities to help children and parents take advantage of concrete social concepts. A combination of individual and group parent training is the most effective approach when building skills that emphasize social connections and parents’ ability to access social supports.
