Qualified Medication Aide

Job Description

A Qualified Medication Aide (QMA) is a Certified Nurse Aide (CNA) who has completed additional training, annual in-service training, and demonstrated competency while dispensing and passing medications and/or applying/administering treatments under the direct supervision of a registered nurse or a licensed practical nurse. A QMA must have an active CNA license and provide verification of 1,000 hours worked as a CNA in the past 24 months.

The qualified medication aide training program allows students to gain knowledge in a classroom setting. Students experience various learning techniques including videos, games, hands-on skills in the lab, and real-life experience in a long-term care facility. Students are required to successfully pass weekly exams and final exams to successfully pass the class. The program prepares students to successfully pass their written state exam.
